WHERE ARE YOU!

CHARLTON COMICS 25¢

NO. 3 JUL | 00103 75/CDC

APPROVED BY THE COMICS CODE AUTHORITY

Make your first big step a good one. With Ryder training.

Some people weren't cut out to be cooped up.

Maybe you're one of them. You want to climb the Big Rig Ladder. And Ryder Technical is where you start your climb.

By the time you've completed your training course, you will know what it is like to swing up into a big rig cab like this one. Show it who's boss. Make those 855 cubic inches of raw diesel power behave, with a lot of gears to tame them.

Your Ryder Tech course begins with home study lessons, learning the rules of the road, safety regulations for different types of cargo, drive trains, transmissions, braking systems.

Then you move on to the real thing at a Ryder Training Center. We put you through three tough weeks of driver training, on the driving range and on the road. Backing. Docking. Coupling. Doing reverse serpentines. Then taking the big rigs out on the Interstate.

You got what it takes to take on the big rigs? Over 20? Good driving record? In good physical condition? Then fill out the coupon today and let's talk it over. If you're a veteran, great! Ryder Technical Institute is approved for veteran's training.

If you want to climb the big rig ladder, start with the pros at Ryder.

Climb the big rig ladder with Ryder training.

Lok the elf has just dispatched his apprentice into the fields to tend his herd of aphids. The giant humans who lived in huge wooden dwellings periodically trimmed the fast-growing grass, leaving the fodder for Lok's herds to graze upon. Lok had but one job during the hot summer months, and that was to awaken his apprentice and lecture him on the day's chores. Then he could go back to sleep.

But today, Lok decided to enjoy the early morning sunshine. He splashed his face with ice-cold dew, collected in the cap of an acorn. As he wiped his face with a willow leaf, he thought to himself, "Today I think I'll investigate that field beyond the giant fence. Last year it was full of poisonous toadstools and prickly weeds, but this year a group of humans have been tending it and planting good grass. My aphids could certainly use a change."

There was one other reason why Lok wanted to move, but this he would not admit, even to himself. He was afraid, and for good reason. A cat had recently come to know Lok's territory as its own. It stood at a height of four elves the size of Lok and appeared to have a certain animosity toward elves. Lok's aphids were immune from attack (except when the huge cat accidentally stepped on them), but Lok had cause to flee more than once.

Lok was soon ready to leave. He slung a rope, fashioned from a spider's web, over his shoulder, and at his side dangled a sword, forged by pixie magic. He adjusted his cap, and with a few trial whistles to make sure he was in tune, he began the journey.

Before he had walked a hundred paces, a huge shadow crossed his path. He froze. Between him and the sun it stood — the cat!

Lok was not a coward, but neither was he a fool. Without a second thought, he whirled about and vanished into a rhododendron forest. The cat followed, the intertwining foliage hampered its movements. Lok had no such trouble, he being much smaller than the cat.

The chase continued for long minutes and Lok knew that the cat would not give up. Suddenly an idea came to him. He had seen the humans use a magical powder to soothe the cat, and Lok knew where it was. He painstakingly made his way to a gigantic storage shelter, but then stopped dead in his tracks. He looked up and saw the potion in a large box marked CATNIP. Although Lok could not read these letters, he knew the box contained what he needed. There was only one problem. It was too high for him to reach. Of course this was not his only problem, for the cat would soon be upon him.

"I know what I can do," he thought as he pulled the spider webbing from his shoulder and knotted it into a lariat. He swung it about his head, and then with a mighty effort, tossed it high into the air toward a protruding nail. It caught. With one final look over his shoulder at the cat, he hoisted himself up toward the shelf. It was hard work because Lok's elfin body was not as slim as it should have been.

Panting heavily, he finally clambered onto the shelf just as the cat reached the dangling rope. The cat took a few vicious swipes at the thread and then spotted Lok. The elf gave a smile and a wave, but the cat was not pacified by this friendly gesture. It crouched and sprang toward the ledge that supported Lok. It missed, but not by much, its claws raking the wood.

"This will not do at all," thought Lok as he wedged himself between box and wall, and started to push. Although he was strong by elfin standards, the box was heavy, and Lok was tired, having just ran and climbed, two things elves are not prone to do. But desperation can accomplish great things, and this was the case as a final effort toppled the canister over the ledge and onto the cat's head.

At first the cat was stunned, but soon the fierce hatred returned to its eyes. But before it could leap toward the defenseless elf, it inhaled the scent of the spilled catnip.

A change immediately occurred in the cat's aggressive behavior. Up to this point, Lok had never heard the cat do anything but growl, but now it was purring. Lok, however, was still suspicious. "It sounds like a growl that got stuck in his throat," he thought. But the other effects of the magical herb were apparent.

The cat left the storage shed slowly and with a dreamy expression on its face. Surely there was strong magic here.

Lok now had time to wonder at the ability of this substance to placate the cat's anger. He slid down his rope and stood ankle-deep in the scattered powder. He knelt, scooped a handful, and placed it beneath his nose. He sniffed it cautiously at first but was soon inhaling deeply. All it did was make him sneeze.
